Dear Larry:

I sincerely appreciated your letter of the 12th. At the moment I am making no decisions about publishers in case I find that I can write anything worthwhile. In view of the long absence from writing during the past ten years or more, I want to try out my hand before I promise to deliver anything.

However, I do appreciate your writing and hope we can get together more often now that I shall have the opportunity to be in New York more often than over the past years.

Sincerely,

Allen W. Dulles
